

1. That which a river deposits on your field through an inundation is acquired by you through the law of nations.
2. No one ought to grow richer through another's loss.
3. By trying all things, easily-taught skill conquers.
4. Now we are consequently equals.
5. There must be a distinction between a true and seeming contract. There must be a distinction between subject and form.
6. On Friday I will set out from Copenhagen for home.
7. Application to learning embellishes prosperity; it offers comfort in adversity.
8. O irrational animal! How great is your ignorance!
9. He said these things wretchedly and haltingly without method.
10. At that time your interests are at stake, when the wall nearest to you is on fire.
11. Let the philosophical state suffer no harm.
12. The uneducated mass is a hideous, horrible monster, from whom light has been removed.
13. The soul depends on the body.
14. I am accustomed to vary repeatedly important and serious customs by games and jokes.
15. He who drinks well, sleeps well.
16. It is necessary to distinguish between matter and form before you descend into the arena.
17. ...And just as surely a huge wounded tree, when the most recent blow strikes, whither it may fall is in doubt, and it is feared that it will fall on all sides, so the soul...